"It was 3.15 pm. I had been in Bangkok International Airport for more than 8 hours. The muscle of my entire body was tighten because of anxiety. My stomach twitched. Although I hadn't eaten anything for more than 12 hours, I was nauseated. I moved the weight of my body from my right foot to the left, leaning on the magazine stand of bookshop and flipping through a detective novel in my hand. Although there were 5 unknown words in every 10 in every sentence, I still tried my best to act like a college student who traveled with budget airlines and waiting for the transit - certainly not like a transborderer waiting for the guide from our company. The airport police passed by the bookshop and nodded at me. It was his third time patrolling past this joint. Just when I was thinking of finding a place to crash in without spending much money, I heard someone called me 'Tom...' I looked up from the flipping pages."
